

Who I am

I was born in Nottingham, Great Britain and spent my childhood there. After finishing my Bachelor's degree in German and French in Manchester – with extended stays in Germany and France – I stayed on at the University of Manchester to successfully complete a Master's degree in Linguistics followed by a PhD in Linguistics. I moved to Berlin in 2001 and have been living and working in Germany since then.

What I do

I draw on my 20-plus years of experience working in scientific research in Germany in my current role as a trainer and advisor for people who are starting out in the German university system, for people who are looking for some (new) direction, or for those who are considering the shift to working outside the academic sector. Since I have an international background myself and have spent considerable time working in multi-ethnic teams, one of my areas of focus in advising and training is on helping people who find themselves in a new cultural and professional situation and who need support with that. My own academic career path and my leadership experience helps me to understand the situation of post-docs and doctoral candidates particularly well and to channel my experience in a supportive way in advising them – that's why this group is a special target group for me. I also use my qualifications and experience as a linguist in my role as a communications trainer and I offer seminars and workshops on subjects such as: Using English as the language of science, Presenting in English, Expression and writing skills, Online/Digital Communication.

Studies and professional experience

- Visiting professorships in Göttingen and in Potsdam, 2011–2012 und 2019–2022
- Series Editor at the scientific publishing house Language Science Press
- Over 20 years as a university lecturer and researcher in English and in German linguistics in Berlin, Göttingen and Frankfurt am Main, 2002–2022
- PhD in Linguistics at the University of Manchester, 1997–2001
- Bachelor and Master's degrees in German, French and Linguistics at the University of Manchester, 1989–1996

What else?

I enjoy lots of sporting activities in my free time and am always interested in cultural exchange with other people. I live in Berlin with my husband and our son.